ArtWeek 2019

Helping “people access creativity across the Commonwealth”
by NELL PORTER BROWN

Screenings from The 90-Second Newbery Film Festival. A match-up of poets and painters on Cape Cod. Dancing along Malden’s bike trail. And an afternoon of Spanish cuisine and Flamenco performers in Cambridge. This spring’s ArtWeek (April 25-May 6) offers “creative experiences that do not happen at any other time of the year,” says Susan Dahling Sullivan, chief strategic officer of the nonprofit Boch Center, producer of the 12-day annual event. “ArtWeek provides people access to art and culture in new ways. From hands-on art-making and demonstrations to panel discussions and performances—the week has something that allows people to get closer to the creative process themselves.”

ArtWeek began in 2013 (thanks to seed money from ArtPlace America), with 25 events in Boston. It has since grown to encompass more than 100 partner organizations and 525 events in 130 communities across the state. Says Sullivan, “The original idea was inspired by the popularity of restaurant weeks, but not necessarily with the same business model of offering meals (or art) at discounted prices.”

It was also a response to research conducted by the National Endowment for the Arts and LaPlaca Cohen (a firm that tracks trends and behaviors among cultural consumers) that reveals a shifting paradigm “in terms of how people are engaging with the “Participation used to be more of a passive activity: sit in a chair and listen to a concert and go see an art-exhibit opening. You wouldn’t hear the artists talk about their processes, or, going to a play, you wouldn’t hear the cast and director talk about the show afterward.” Studies show that people are highly motivated to attend arts events by “having fun, and learning and experiencing new things,” she continues: the very definitions of culture are widening to beyond the traditional genres of ballet, opera, and painting, and now extend to “community festivals, public art, and even food and drinks.”

ArtWeek organizers welcome both traditional and unconventional art-making—from gatherings with a social-justice and community-building theme, like an all-ages, all-abilities jogging event along “mural mile” in Framingham, she says, to off-beat experiences of the kind provided by an artist who fashioned instruments out of ice at the Faneuil Hall Frost Ice Loft (since closed) and

ALL IN A DAY: Spring Outings at Mass Audubon Sanctuaries

The Parker River National Wildlife Refuge stretches along the coast of Plum Island, near Newburyport. In addition to prime beach and walking territory for humans, the refuge’s 4,700 acres provide diverse habitats, from dunes and mudflats to marshlands, that are especially important for birds.

Mass Audubon’s nearby Joppa Flats Education Center holds events and excursions that explore these precious ecosystems, including “Falconry & A Raptor Road Trip,” on March 16. The adventure is led by Joppa Flats school and youth education coordinator Lisa Hutchings, teacher-naturalist Jonathan Brooks, and falconer Wendy Pavlicek, who also directs the Burlington Science Center, part of that town’s public-school system. She starts the day with a live birds-of-prey demonstration, and will explain their habits and hunting, and share her own experiences with these winged predators. That will be followed by an expedition into the refuge in search of raptors.

Elsewhere, Mass Audubon hosts other early spring events, such as the “Maple Sugaring” weekend (March 23-24) at Moose Hill Wildlife Sanctuary, in Sharon, and at Brookwood Farm, in the Canton section of the Blue Hills Reservation. Visitors use traditional tools and learn the age-old method of tapping sap from trees and boiling it into syrup.

At the Drumlín Farm Wildlife Sanctuary, in Lincoln, find out how the sheep, goats, pigs, and other barnyard animals are readying to emerge from winter. Or trek along the path at Bird Hill to see local raptors and pheasants. Short trails also diverge to other points across the 200-acre property, some with prime views of New Hampshire’s Mount Monadnock, others with sightings of the sanctuary’s white-tail deer. On March 30, the site hosts Woolapalooza. The annual fiber festival features the farm’s newest animal babies, sheep-shearing, works and demonstrations by local fiber artisans, and hands-on activities for kids.

For an evening event open only to those over 16, check out “Timberdoodles and Tapas,” at the North River Wildlife Sanctuary, in Marshfield, on Boston’s South Shore (April 6). Enjoy a Spanish-style dinner, then head outside to find an American woodcock (also known as a timberdoodle, bogsucker, and mudbat) performing his buzzing calls and elaborate and acrobatic aerial courtship display. “In the evening,” according to timberdoodles.org, “males may sing and fly for half an hour or longer, and when the moon is bright, they may carry on through the night.”

then held a concert. Access and affordability are high priorities, too: more than 60 percent of ArtWeek events are free, and 90 percent are either free or cost under $25.

This year’s complete schedule will be posted online by April 1. But here’s a short preview:

Malden Dance Mile (April 27) is a free, collaborative “dance adventure” led by Monkeyhouse and OnStage Dance Company along U.S. Bicycle Route 1. Performances, choreographed community dancing, music, and games are open to anyone, of any ability.

Those more interested in exploring meditative movement might try the Tai Chi and Qi Gong Interactive Demonstration (May 4), at the Asian Crane Tai Chi studio in Plymouth. The ancient Chinese disciplines, with roots in the martial arts, offer wellness benefits—and the graceful, supremely focused motions are beautiful to watch.

In South Yarmouth, the Cultural Center of Cape Cod hosts Mutual Muses XI: A Marriage of Art and Poetry (April 17-May 5). The exhibit offers synergistic works generated by pairing 50 visual artists with 50 poets; each poet provides a poem, based on which the artist creates a piece of visual art, and vice versa. The resulting 100 “inspirations” and “responses” will be displayed, and wall space and art supplies are provided as well, for visitors’ own imaginative reactions. The aim, says Sullivan, is to “help people experience what it’s like to be part of that collaboration, or to work across media.”

The annual, nationwide 90-Second Newbery Film Festival is a video-making project for which children and teenagers create “offbeat, condensed versions of Newbery Award-winning books.” The best entries, along with other locally created videos, will be screened at the Boston Public Library on April 27, with guest filmmakers and co-hosts/prize-winning authors James Kennedy (The Order of Odd Fish) and M.T. Anderson (Feed, Octavian Nothing Saga).

Harvard’s own ArtsFirst Festival (May 2-5) happens to coincide with ArtWeek this year, and itself offers scores of student performances. Check the ArtWeek events schedule for additional special activities on campus, and especially at Harvard’s museums.

Yet ArtWeek is not solely focused on literary, performing, and fine arts, Sullivan asserts. “There are lots of definitions of creativity. Forbes consistently reports that creativity is among the most desirable tal-
STAFF PICK: Laying It On

Howardena Pindell: What Remains To Be Seen, a traveling show at the Rose Art Museum, reveals her ardent experimentation. Across a 50-year career, from figurative drawings and abstract paintings to conceptual works and photography, Pindell has played with fantastical color schemes (as in Untitled #4D, below), delved into deconstructionism, and revealed in circles and serialized forms. Works of collaged strips of textiles—ripped, then re-sewn—are painted over. Some are embedded with texts, numbers, or surreal images; others are adorned with glitter, talcum powder, and perfume. In her New York City studio, Pindell has hole-punched thousands of paper dots that she sprinkles or clumps onto canvases, layering on acrylic or spray paint, to create, by turns, raw textures and dreamy, abstract, impressionistic depths.

Other multimedia collages reflect both her world travels and her social-justice causes. Her 1980 filmed performance Free, White and 21 examines racism. It marked her return to work after a near-fatal car crash, and an enduring resolve to create.

at the other end of the spectrum, to experience joy and wonder and express ourselves in different ways. Creativity captures the past and allows you to envision a future.”

ArtWeek delves into physics, for example, in See the World Differently through Kaleidoscope Sculptures (April 27), sited next to Boston’s Christopher Columbus Waterfront Park. The ‘scope art is hosted by Beautiful Forms to See and explores technical facets of mirrored systems and light refraction, while offering nearly infinite, ever-changing, mind-bending images. The project is entrancing—while enhancing knowledge of science, technology, engineering, art, and math (known as STEAM).

A half-mile walk away, in the North End, Changing Course (April 27-28) highlights oceanic life and the impact of human-created pollution. Presented by Save the Harbor/Save the Bay, the sculptures comprise 2,000 plastic drinking bottles collected from regional beaches and waterways that, when strung together, depict “a powerful school of fish swimming upstream against the tide of plastics.” Creators aim to inspire people to stop using plastic products or, at least, constructively recycle them.

ArtWeek also taps into fresh perspectives on cultural history. The Massachusetts Historical Society, in Boston, has organized the exhibit “‘Can She Do it?’ Massachusetts Debates a Woman’s Right to Vote,” (April 26-September 21) and during ArtWeek, on April 29, hosts a reception with guest curator Allison Lange, assistant history professor at Wentworth Institute of Technology, who explains how imagery was used to define gender and power during the suffrage movement.

Each year, ArtWeek draws more participating towns, organizations, and individuals, Sullivan says: “Everyone is seeing the value of this designated time as a way to help people access creativity across the Commonwealth. Creativity is one of the most important elements of a full life.”
